

I think the traffic and weather are invaluable to all radio listeners. The local channels only fit that critical information in between the same 12 songs they play each hour and usually the information is given over music playing in the background and since it is not frequent enough if you miss the beginning you might have missed something critical. XM is a service that we PAY good money for and since we are PAYING it should not be any concern of the broadcast radio market as to what we are PAYING for.
